Lets start a thread to decide what needs to be done for the 2010 ITP/MOOSE National Championship.

- 1.) Make it easier for riders to attend the 2010 ITP/MOOSE Racing AMA ATV Motocross Championship and still have a chance to win a national title
- 2.) Get more riders to the national championship races.

Here is what needs to happen. Please add your 2 cents.

We take the 2010 ITP/MOOSE Championship and split it into two 5 race sub series called the northern series and the southern series with the national champion decided a Loretta Lynn's . This is how it would work.

The Northern Series would be

1. Walnut, IL
2. Delmont, PA
3. Millville, MN
4. New Berlin, NY
5. Buchanan, MI

The Southern Series would be

1. Pell City, AL
2. Bowling Green, KY
3. Danville, VA
4. Blountville, TN
5. Armaugh, PA

The 5 races in each sub-series would be totaled as follows. In the Northern sub-series, 3 of the 5 races must come from the northern series with the remaining 2 races coming from any race in the total series either north or south. In the Southern sub-series 3 of the 5 races must come from the southern sub-series with the remaining 2 races coming from any race in the total series either north or south.

The championship would be decided at Loretta Lynn's. Where the race would be counted as 1.5 times the normal value.

Why do we split the series into sub-series? This will allow riders to race as few as 5 races and Loretta Lynn's and still win a national championship.

Why do we need to race 3 races from one sub-series and 2 more from the total series? 3 races from one sub-series evens the playing field, it makes a rider commit to one sub series where they will race against the same riders in most races. The 2 races from the total series allows for flexibility, it lets racers race when they can find the time or the money.

Why count Loretta Lynn's as 1.5 times a normal race? Loretta Lynn's will be the national championship race between the two sub-series. It allows the top 2 or 3 points leaders in the two sub-series a chance to become national champion.
